

Mutual Mutant, swing to attack!

Part 1:

TICK, TACK is a walking performance sliding through Henriksberg industrial area in Hägersten.

How does a place prepare to die, or does it? Tick, Tack is taking you for a walk through the area in the present, past and future.

Tick, Tack is a comment to distribution of space in a city, a procession, a burial of a place that came to grow unexpected. The symbiotic urban planning has given Henriksberg a variation of small businesses, studios and apartments. When we have value entangled in land and real estate as well as housing shortage, it may seem rational to remove areas without a clear logic or function. Tick, Tack connects the gentrification process in the city to a more existential dimension of the people affected. When the economy deals with land and soil, it is also linked to our bodies and lives in a cycle where economics cannot be separated from ecology.
